WHEELING, W. VA, MAY 8, 1884.

FREW, CAMPBELL & HART,

A Antioval Guard. nor of Missouri tendering him the commission of Brigadier-General of the National Guard of Missouri, General Sherman adds to his declination some com ments applicable to most of the States, and not more to Missouri than West Virginia. The General says that while he cannot accept the commission, as a resident and tax-payer he shall insist on his full right to the absolute security of his life and erty; and he adds: this end, the maintenance by the State woll regulated militia is of more impor-sthan all the politics with which our learse kept in a state of everlasting ex-nent. The State makes liberal provision citement. The fitate makes liberal provision for its local police, for its courts, Judges, Sheriffs and Marshals; for its legislative and executive officers, but foolishly expects its militia, composed of poor young expects its graits their time and money, to provide their own armories, uniforms, clothing, arms, and accontrements, and to respond to the call of the Governor to quell riots and mobs, always caused by some nonulus claims of prejudice. neighbors and omployers, and less the very bread needed by their familits. This should not be, and now is the time to correct this syll, which is universal in the Uunited States.

The General advises the Governor to urge upon the Senators and Representtives of Missouri the passage of the Slocum Militia bill, and upon the State Legislature a nation to defend a public institution whose versity, as any man can see by taking the whole amount appropriated by the Levisceived annually on the endowment fund and dividing the sum by 65, the number of and dividing the sum by 65, the number of students in attendance. The students do not get this money. There are no free scholarships. It costs each student from $200 to $500 to live in Morgantown, but cadets do not pay inition and they get their books free, which is a small amount in comparison to the $10,000 paid to professors who fill their chairs and lecture to empty class rooms. They have prepared their feast, but the tainted flesh pots of decayed Bourbonism drives the guests from their least, but the tainted item pois of de-cayed Bourbonism drives the guests from their wide-open doors.

But in all the confusion, clash and storm that has attended the downfall of the West Virginia University there are a few names that will be honored in the State when its that will be honored in the State when its principal institution of learning is placed on a sure foundation above the clouds that shadow its present prosperity. One question that time and trial have tested they were on the right side "beyond the shadow of doubt." Adam W. Lorentz breathes the air that floats above denospozucism and has worked steadily and faithfully for the upbuilding of the University, and looked university upon the dissistrous faction that favorably upon the disa arged the changes which have wrought its rion.

Jas. M. Lee, Major and Commandant of Cadets and Superintendent of grounds and buildings, is a gentleman of the fairest type, as every student of the old school can testify. During his administration the cadet corps reached its golden age. The corps was divided, and two full companies were on the field, officered, equipped and drilled in the most thorough manner. A graduate of the University, he knew its wants and its necessities, and regarded the intended changes as stepping stones to the intended changes as stepping stones to the downfall of the institution.

Still he toiled on in his work, disregard ing the barriers placed in his way by the Sybarites, who songht luxury and a change from 'Thompsonian methods rather than the true welfare of the school.

the true welfare of the school.

The corps has been reduced in number with the reduction of the number in attendance, but the same military discipline and bearing are required of the few that was expected of the many. The discipline is purely military in that department—nothing—short, to flatter the individual whims of canting men who sought the destruction of this department, and no extras. Cadets pay due respect to all officers, The citquette of the soldier is all that is required, and the young man who does hinnee in time of trouble. We have never had, and never shall have, any difficulty in putting in the field a sufficient force of men drawn from peaceful pursaits, but the experience of the late war teaches the greater value of the well-drilled militiants and over the raw recruit. From the militia of the states our officers were largely drawn, and many of these achieved renown. But a well-ordered State force is useful in time of peace to reinforce the civil arm of the law, when life and, property would otherwise be without protection.

As General Sherman points out, States are willing to make liberal provision for anything else, the militian must take care of itself. About the only encouragement that men have to form themselves into military companies is that it offers another way to spend their money. Nobody expects a police force to be self-supporting; the day of volunteer firemen is over except in the smallest places; yet the militians as expected to provide for himself almost everything that he needs. This is not fair to the men, and a worse policy for the Sautewould be difficult to conceive.

Our standing army numbers about 25, 600 men. We could easily have a National Guard of half a million effective men, who could be put in the field at a week's notice, ready to do good service. The sentiment of the country is opposed to a large standing army and to compulsory military service, neither of which is necessary. If the National Suard that will be creditable to fifty-five millions of people. Even West Virginia would wake up and do something.
